By reference to the preceeding table, most of the items of interest, connected with School Districts will be seen.

The whole number of scholars in town, attending the schools two weeks and upwards is 292. The whole amount of money appropriated for the use of schools in town for the year, is $1 859 10.

I feel to congratulate, generally, the several school districts in their choice of teachers; the most of them were well selected; none have approached a failure, but, on the contrary, most of them have been very successful. Some of the teachers had a happy faculty of directing the minds of their pupils in the thorough treatment of one branch of study; others in that of another; and while some excelled in discipline, others were hardly equal to the task. But where all the teachers were so faithful, competent and energetic, and the scholars, with a few exceptions, so orderly and obedient, it is entirely unnecessary for your Committee to particularize each individual case. Moreover, I now think that the report of the Superintending School Committee should be confined to matters of more importance than the specific criticism of teachers.

But allow me to direct your attention to matters that are really important. First, with regard to the multiplicity of Text Books. I am sorry to say there has been no improvement since my last report, but the reverse. I now find in the schools, Hilliards and the Analytical Readers. Of Arithmetics, I find a large variety: Colburn's, Robinson's, Eaton's Primary, Intellectual, Practical and Common School; and Greenleaf's Primary, Intellectual, Practical, Common School and National. In one district, fourteen pupils are reported to me as attending to Arithmetic, with six different works on the subject. In another school, I find the same number of works used in nine different classes. This is not as it should be. No teacher can interest a class, or do justice to a recitation, by devoting to it less than thirty minutes.

The idea of having nine different classes in Arithmetic, which should take at least four hours and a half in their recitations, leaving but one hour and half for Reading, Writing, Spelling, Grammar, Geography, and recesses, seems to your Committee to be preposterous. Is it any thing strange that your children do not learn faster, with such a multiplicity of classes? Of Grammars, too, we have a variety: Weld and Quackenbos, Quackenbos', Greens, Browns and Kerls. Of Geographies, there are Cornells, and Guyots series, and Montiths. Some have said to me, why do you not make things different? My answer is: because parents get vexed if the subject of a change of School Books is spoken of. They seem to think that if they have to spend a dollar or two for new books, when they have some old ones on hand, their money is thrown away.

I believe a scholar will learn more from a new book than an old one, even if the new one is no better in matter or style. But there, is not where lies the principal advantage. The number of classes is reduced and thus time is gained in which the teacher can explain and illustrate the several studies. Then, again, new ideas are being constantly sought after, and introduced into our books, and if properly taught, they will materially advance the education of our children.

Too little time is devoted in our common schools to Composition and Declamations. Some without doubt think these exercises are useless. The correct and effective expression of our thoughts, in the English language either orally or in writing, is of the first importance, and should be a prominent object in Common School education. Other great, though incidental, benefits to be derived from composition, are the continued practice of Penmanship, and the practical knowledge of the proper use of capital letters. By declamation, the pupil not only acquires a force and distinctness of enunciation by which his reading is improved, but his memory is also cultivated and with a proper selection of pieces, the noblest sentiments of literature may be forever fixed in his mind, to guide, control and elevate his future life.

But notwithstanding the schools have been so good, they are not what they should be: nor what your Committee would like to see them. They should be better, and might be, I think, if the suggestions already made in this report were adopted. Still, there has been a marked improvement within the last five years, both in teachers and pupils, especially where they have availed themselves of the benefits to be derived from our State Normal School.

J. W. PRESTON, S. S. Committee.
